These innovative pyjamas make bedtime easy. The Smart Pyjamas can be scanned by a smartphone. Each part of the pyjamas links to a different story—from Mother Goose to The Little Mermaid. The phone reads the tales out loud. Not surprisingly, the pyjamas have made some people angry. One online commentator said: "You should read to your children and together create memories that will last a lifetime." Well, I agree. [orange.co.uk, accessed 28.5.13]

Critics made fun of European Union bureaucrats on Saturday for making strict new rules on how restaurants should serve olive oil. Restaurants will be banned from serving oil to diners in small glass jugs. They will have to instead use little bottles that must be thrown away after a single use. One German newspaper described the plan as "the strangest decision since the legendary curvy cucumber regulation". And we all know how many problems that caused! [reuters.com, accessed 28.5.13]

A New York police officer got stuck in a tree while trying to rescue a stuck cat. The unlucky officer suddenly became light-headed and had to make an embarrassing call for help. He was 30ft up the tree. A neighbor with a ladder soon came to the rescue as schoolchildren gathered to watch the drama going on. Both police officer and cat were eventually rescued safe and sound. In a motel security video a white car can be seen speeding into a motel parking lot. The driver hits a black car sitting in the parking lot. The black car is then pushed into the motel's swimming pool. Motel guests are glad no one was at the pool when the car fell in. Oh my, the things that happen! [telegraph.co.uk, accessed 27.8.12]
