6.2.

Playing video games is a favourite activity of children, yet its effect on their health is often perceived to be negative. A new study investigated the association between the amount of time spent playing video games and children's mental health and cognitive and social skills, and found that children who play video games a lot are in fact socially more active with their peers. In addition, there were no significant associations with any mental health problems.

6.3.

Steven Donovan was out on the job, delivering pizza, when he saw a small dog darting amid traffic on a busy road. "I was about to turn onto a major road and I saw him rush across the street," Donovan told the press. "I immediately turned around and went back. I couldn't just leave the dog out there." Donovan went after him, taking him to the safety of the car. His tag read "Snickers" and he only lived a couple of miles from where Donovan rescued him. But before he could deliver Snickers home, he had to deliver a pizza. At the delivery location, Donovan explained the reason he was late and the customers understood completely.

6.4.

Like it or not, Facebook has an impact on politics. The company's CEO, Mark Zuckerberg, has recently started to acknowledge Facebook's role in politics, and last week the social network introduced its most impactful feature yet. Facebook officially released a tool that lets its users in the US easily contact their local officials. It's called "Town Hall", reminiscent of what Facebook likes to see itself as, especially in political discussion. The tool finds the officials based on your address and lets you get in touch with them.

A common mistake – and it's not even so much a mistake but it's more of just a function of nerves – if you are a junior person and maybe interviewing for a first job, it's not unexpected that you might speak more quickly, your pace may be too quick. But to know that if you lower the tone of your voice a little bit, that literally adds more meaning to your words. A lower tone sounds more substantive and what you're talking about sounds more important.
